Other Useful Resources

Northwest Public Health (magazine)

How can we use evidence to create more equitable public health systems in our communities? The 2018 issue of Northwest Public Health, produced by NWCPHP, explores how public health professionals are generating and using evidence for better decision-making, policy development and program planning at state and local levels. Read the entire issue online at www.northwestpublichealth.org.

Join NWCPHP's 2019 Public Health Management Certificate

As the challenge to deliver efficient public health services becomes more pronounced, it's important for managers to possess critical skills in core areas such as budgeting, planning, organizing, and personnel management. NWCPHP is now accepting applications for the 2019 Public Health Management Certificate—a program designed to help public health professionals build these important skills to become successful managers. Applications will be accepted through June 1, with early-bird rates available to those who apply by May 1. Visit www.nwcphp.org/management-certificate to learn more.

Great Plains Leadership Institute

Established in 2005, the Great Plains Leadership Institute is a year-long competency-based training program designed for established and emerging leaders in organizations in our region whose primary mission is to improve the health and well-being of populations and communities. A robust experiential curriculum includes residential and distance learning, mentoring and coaching, and collaborative practice projects.
